Yams were studied in the field to determine the position of the tubers relative to the banks. The results were used in the design and development of a tractor-mounted yam lifter. After considerable testing and modification a model was produced which operated with reasonable success in the limited trials which it was possible to undertake.