Says
He Is Still Listening For A Road March

QUESTION: Seems like every band is going to have its own "leggo" for Carnival. Do you think something general will materialise before Monday?

TIME and PLACE: Last night—About the tents.

REPLIES:

ORRIE: Don't worry with that. As long as there's something to jump with, I don't mind in the least. Anyway we still have plenty of time and something might crop up. Some people like the idea of this Ju-C number, but although it's catchy, I think we should have something more in keeping with the spirit of the season, if you see what I mean. Like last year there was the Ramgoat Baptism and Glory Mama Glory. Something like that

D. SKEETE: The "Almanac" came out too early. The first time I heard it was at the Trade Fair and I thought then that they should have kept in for Carnival. If that song had hit the road around this time, then we would have had a grand road-march. He did the same thing with Georgie Porgie last year and it was hardly played by the bands at Carnival. But as Orrie says you might hear something tonight or tomorrow night that would settle the whole matter. You don't want any big thing you know, just something everybody can sing and jump to.

RICHARD CLARKE: Boy I don't know myself. All the steel bands are practising different tunes, and the truth is I haven't heard any particular number that I would call a real march. The "Almanac?" well yes, that would have been O.K., but now it's stale. If every band has its own number that would be confusion in town.

GERRY SAMPSON: I don't play Mas', so it doesn't worry me. Don't think I come to the tent, because I haven't got money to throw away. I've been hearing that the Police banned some of the songs and from what I hear, I don't blame them either. Long ago calypsoes were nice, but nowadays they aren't so "hot." A little too much on the 'pointed side' for me.

FRANK OSBORNE: When you hear the leggo we have, everybody will be playing it. That is leggo. The other night the boys went wild when they heard it. Up to now nothing has come up at the tent that can be called the march for the year. The boys are too busy with the Police to think up a real hot number.
