ENGLISH LANGUAGE ARTS (ELA)

Rationale

The National Primary English Language Arts curriculum is intended to motivate students to study, use and enjoy English language and literatures written in English. Learning English includes learning the language, learning through the language, and learning about the language. Its study involves understanding the internal integration of the skills (listening, speaking, reading and writing) and understanding language itself as a tool for learning. Language provides access to learning. When students understand language they automatically access the entire curriculum. As the curriculum is enacted, the cross-curricula functional use of language is also illustrated. Students use language to master what they learn in different subjects and while doing so each subject in turn helps students to sharpen their language skills. Additionally, students learn at different rates so their acquisition of language and literacy skills varies. All students, however, must develop mastery of the English language skills which is critical to their overall development. The English Language Arts curriculum seeks to facilitate this developmental process through a systematic, integrated, learner-centred approach.

It is to be noted that throughout the National Primary Curriculum an intra-disciplinary, theme-based approach has been adopted. This is intended to facilitate students' language and literacy development and is a key focus of the curriculum. Language learning is intended to be continuous as the curriculum is enacted on any given day. Students can acquire language and subject content simultaneously as they engage in learning activities. This approach helps students connect language across learning areas, see language in effect in real contexts and use language for meaningful purposes. However, the teaching of language through content is not exclusive. Planned and explicit teaching of core reading, writing and grammar skills must continue using creative and dynamic strategies. Importantly, the curriculum is not prescriptive with regard to the teaching of grammar. Approaches will vary but presenting grammar in context is highly recommended. Students are to be guided in applying their grammar learning in their own writing, reading and speaking. In this way, grammar becomes relevant and alive in students' consciousness and psychological resistance to its study can decline.

The National Primary English Language Arts curriculum is designed to support students throughout the process of acquiring, developing and mastering requisite skills and knowledge for effective communication. In Trinidad and Tobago, the co-existence of two major linguistic systems, English Creole and Standard English, poses specific problems for some learners. The English Language Arts curriculum explicitly recognizes the nature of this challenge and seeks to address it through a student-centred approach to learning which respects students' linguistic experiences. The language children bring to the classroom, their first language, is a tool for building their awareness of the English language. When teaching English and communication breaks down, students' first language becomes a natural support. This is because both languages are supportive of students' overall linguistic development. Awareness of the two major linguistic systems, English Creole and Standard English is in-built in the ELA programme. The teaching of grammar is central to students' understanding of English language structures and of the grammatical patterns in English Creole. Students need also to understand explicitly, the nature of the relationship between the English Creole and Standard English. When this understanding occurs, students will avoid confusing the two and the perception of 'bad English use' will be minimised. Trinidad and Tobago is a linguistically diverse country. Consequently, understanding of both English Creole and Standard English contributes to the development of positive attitudes towards languages and language users. The National Primary English Language Arts curriculum facilitates this understanding.

Development in English Language Arts is essential to students' intellectual, social, and emotional growth.

Among others, the teaching of ELA will:

- Help students make connections between classroom learning and out-of-class language use.
- Motivate students to become proactive and independent in their learning.
- Provide the language base for the development of competence in all subject areas.
- Develop an appreciation for literature.
- Encourage students to interact comfortably and competently in different speech contexts.
- Develop their ability to code switch between Standard English and English Creole.
- Develop students' confidence in their linguistic heritage.
- Build self-esteem and empowerment through the development of a personal voice.
- Equip students to engage in reflection and self-awareness and develop awareness of their world.
- Provide a tool for the development of imagination

ORGANIZATIONAL STRUCTURE OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE ARTS CURRICULUM

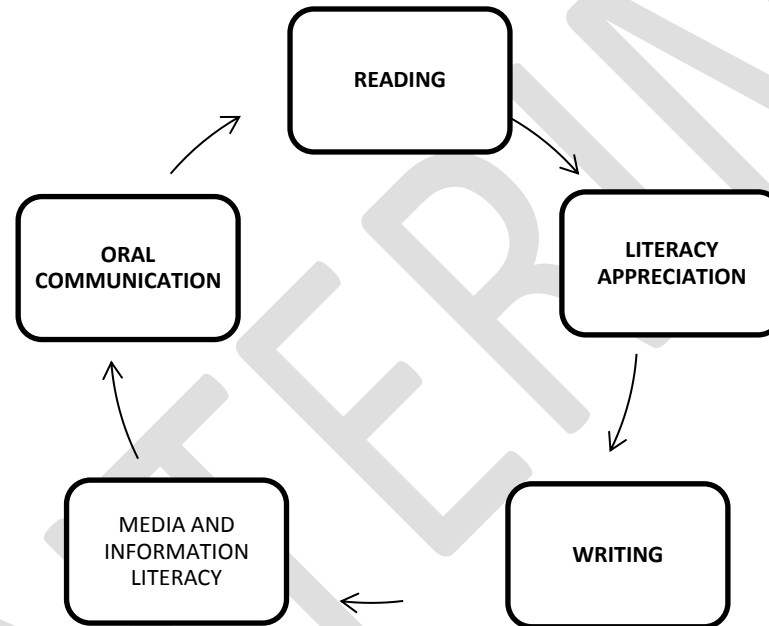

Fig. 1

Oral Communication

Well-developed listening and speaking skills enable students to communicate their ideas, feelings and experiences effectively. As a result, learners who engage in class discussions, using both the Creole English and Standard English, are more in control of and involved in their own learning. Through oral communication instruction and opportunities for interaction, young learners also develop sensitivity to and respect for others and their opinions - two qualities that make for a more humane society. Students also need opportunities to engage in critical listening and thinking. This support gives them the opportunity

Reading

Reading empowers learners, boosts their self-esteem and is critical to successful learning at school. During the early years, oral language development and reading development are tightly linked. As students continue to progress, their acquisition of reading skills is complemented and supported by the development of other literacy skills of writing, speaking and listening. All students will learn to read if systematic and explicit reading instruction is inherent within an enriching literary environment. Reading is developmental and students' progress through the different stages at individual rates. Such differences must be respected and catered to. Learners whose first language is the English Creole might need additional to question what they are learning and ask for clarification to enhance their learning. Students must be supported to ask good questions, to identify problems in thinking as they attempt learning, and be able to correct problems they encounter. In this way they will be better prepared for the world they live in and for their future. Additionally, through the mastering of verbal and nonverbal communication skills, students will have opportunities to communicate, understand, interpret and evaluate information.

support to build their oral English language skills as they learn to read books in formal English. Reading materials that are culturally relevant and age appropriate will stimulate their interest. Helping students to connect what they are reading to their own experiences and background knowledge will support and enhance their reading efforts. The intention is for all students to become literate and be able to understand and process oral, written, electronic and multimedia texts. Consequently, the ultimate goal of the reading programme is to help students become strategic and critical readers; to empower, to achieve independence in reading, and to use literacy in their life-long learning.

Literary Appreciation

Literary Appreciation cultivates the ability to make sense of, experience unconscious delight in, and appreciate and evaluate the quality of literary works. Literature enhances students' behaviour, emotions, attitudes and social values thereby acknowledging differences in personalities, patterns of relationships, and philosophies. In appreciating literature from a variety of cultures, the learner gains pleasure and benefits from listening to, viewing, reading and interacting with literary works. Consequently, literature is a means of education and enlightenment, as it broadens students' knowledge base, strengthens their thinking skills, and develops their awareness of new words and structures of language. Literature also engenders appreciation for local and international culture, helps develop citizenship, builds patriotism, and fosters awareness of self and the environment.

Writing

Writing is a recursive, cognitive process that can help students to make meaning of their learning experiences. The writing programme is carefully designed to develop students' ability to think and write creatively, coherently and to communicate effectively, using the accepted conventions of written language. A systematic and explicit approach to writing across the curriculum enhances students' abilities to use written language for authentic purposes. Students are guided in understanding writing as a process during which their efforts are supported by oral and descriptive feedback. As a result, it is expected that learners will benefit from a more stimulating learning environment that encourages their creativity. An integrated writing programme that is related to their needs and stages of development is planned. Effective writing and reading are naturally connected and are supported by the other literacy skills of speaking and listening. At the centre of English teaching and learning is the creation of authentic texts of increasing complexity for a range of purposes and audiences.

Media and Information Literacy

Young people today are immersed in a world of written, electronic and multimedia texts and as a result the English Language Arts curriculum reflects this paradigm. As both conscious and unconscious consumers and producers of media, it is essential for young learners to be multi-media literate. Much of the media in our environment are aimed at selling products or ideologies; therefore, students as media consumers must be taught how to critically interpret the information they receive. Media and Information Literacy emphasizes the development of enquiry-based skills and the ability to engage meaningfully with media and information channels in whatever form and technologies they appear (UNESCO, 2011). Consequently, the goal of Media and Information Literacy within the ELA curriculum is to develop a literate person who is able to read, analyse, evaluate, and produce communications in a variety of media forms.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE ARTS GENERAL OUTCOMES – INFANTS 1

ORAL COMMUNICATION

- Demonstrate an understanding of appropriate listening etiquette.
- Demonstrate an understanding of appreciative and discriminative listening skills and respond creatively to a variety of audio/audio-visual aesthetic materials.
- Demonstrate listening and speaking skills needed to gain meaning, and to retell.
- Demonstrate appropriate nonverbal communication skills.
- Demonstrate common courtesies in conversations.
- Explore the co-existence of Creole and Standard English in Trinidad and Tobago.

READING

- Detect and manipulate sounds at three levels of sound structure (syllables, onset and rime, and phonemes) in spoken words.
- Engaging with Text
- Understand concepts about print such as directionality in text and book orientation using fiction and non-fiction texts.
- Understand that the blending of sounds produces words that have meaning.
- Understand the use of high-frequency words in different contexts.
- Gain knowledge of new words.
- Display proficiency in reading appropriate-level texts with purpose and understanding.
- Demonstrate the ability to use Reading Comprehension skills and strategies explicitly taught, to make meaning.

LITERARY APPRECIATION

- Recognise and experience delight with different genres in literature (fiction & nonfiction).
- Respond imaginatively to their experiences with literature.

WRITING

- Demonstrate the skills of handwriting readiness.
- Demonstrate neatness and legibility in their handwriting.
- Demonstrate their knowledge of the function of punctuation marks and capitalization.
- Demonstrate knowledge of high frequency words across content areas.
- Demonstrate the ability to compose simple sentences using grammatical patterns explicitly taught.

MEDIA AND INFORMATION LITERACY

- Display an understanding of Media (anything that gives us information).
- Display an understanding of selected forms of media.
(audio – radio; visual – pictures; audio - visual-TV.; print-books etc.)
- Determine the purpose and intended audience of simple media texts (e.g., signs in the immediate environment, pictures and illustrations in books, advertisements in newspapers etc.).
- Demonstrate techniques in creating media
- Demonstrate the ability to use Reading Comprehension skills and strategies explicitly taught, to make meaning.
