Tempo of Panorama

PUT IT down to steelband fever, but the conclusion of Stephen Neal's exciting article on Panorama in last Sunday's Guardian was inadvertently omitted, causing many readers to telephone and ask what had happened.

We are sorry and would now like to fill you in on what happened: As you remember Stephen, having been led astray by a friend, found himself alone and hungry at Skinner Park in San Fernando.

He was rescued by friends who fed him well, and was enjoying the Panorama when the man who caused his problems turned up. Seeing Stephen ensconced among the new crowd he tried to catch his eye. Now read on: I pretended not to know him, he was tight and a little baffled.

I continued my conversation with a charmer from Princes Town. She asked me who was that man trying to attract my attention, I told her he was a con from Diego Martin.

Then came one of the greatest moments in Panorama.

It was the arrival of Antillean All Stars playing Short Shirt's "Tourist Leggo" Never mind when they came to town they were placed 14th or something. Never mind after that demoralisation they were beaten in the South Finals. Ask anyone, especially me, Antillean All Stars on that day of the preliminaries in 1977, playing Tourist Leggo, was one of the most unforgettable experiences and they beat their nearest rival by about 100 points out of 300. Want to bet?
