

ABSTRACT

This project which I have brought forth was done mainly to address the importance of what farmers understand about risk factors and risk mitigation. Referring to information which was collected from farming villages in south Trinidad shows that there is very low risk awareness. In my study I would stress on the importance of risk reduction and risk management, and for these factors to be a successful it is imperative that farmers incorporate within their everyday duties with the recommended practices. This may take some time, but could only happen if farmers work together with their corresponding ministries and Regional Corporation to develop risk mitigation measures.
